II. A trial in which sworn assessors or jurymen decide questions of fact; a judicial inquest.

11. a. Orig. applied to: All legal proceedings of the nature of inquests or recognitions, fiscal, civil, or criminal.

Esp. the Grand or Great Assize, recognition as to the right of the claimant in a writ of right, substituted in the reign of Henry II for trial by battle, the assizes of Mort d'ancestre, Novel disseisin, and Darreine presentment, named in Magna Carta.

[c 1290 BRITTON III. iv. §28 Qe le tenaunt se puse mettre en juree a la semblaunce de graunt assise, i.e. that the tenant may put himself on a jury after the manner of a great assize.] 1297 R. b. Hence, an action to be decided by such a trial; also applied to the writ by which it is instituted.

[c 1481 LITTLETON Tenures §233 Il poit aver Assise de Novel disseisin envers le tenant.] c 1574 Transl. He may have an Assise of novel disseisin against the tenant. a 1626 BACON *Maxims Com. 12. a. Hence (usually in pl.): The sessions held periodically in each county of England, for the purpose of administering civil and criminal justice, by judges acting under certain special commissions (chiefly and usually, but not exclusively, being ordinary judges of the superior courts, or, since 1875, of the Supreme Court).

It was provided by Magna Carta that the judges should visit each county once every year to take assizes (i.e. try writs of assize) of novel disseisin, mort d'ancestre, and darreine presentment (so that the jury who constituted the Grand Assize (see 11) might not be obliged to travel from remote corners of England to appear in court at Westminster). Thence the names assizes, and justices or judges of assize, still retained by these circuit courts and itinerant judges, after their judicial functions have been greatly extended in various directions, especially in that of the trial of felonies and offences.

1. Resemblance or correspondence of sound between two words or syllables.

2. a. Pros. The correspondence or riming of one word with another in the accented vowel and those which follow, but not in the consonants, as used in the versification of Old French, Spanish, Celtic, and other languages.

Lang.* (1862) 403 The rule of assonance.. requires the repetition of the same vowels in the assonant words, from the last accented vowel inclusive. Thus man and hat, nation and traitor, penitent and reticence, are assonant couples of words. 1879 H. NICOL in Encycl. Brit. IX. 633 In the Roland such assonances occur.

b. In extended use: = half-rhyme; the correspondence or rhyming of one word with another in the final (sometimes also the initial) consonant, but not in the vowel. Also applied by philologists, in studying rhyming pairs of words (i.e. with identical vowel), to final consonants of such similarity of articulation as to be acceptable, with poetic licence, in a rhyming position.

[The etymology and form-history present points of difficulty. To all appearance, astone, astune, astoune, was a. OF. estone-r, estuner, estouner (now étonner) to stun, strike senseless, stupefy, shock, astonish:— L. extonāre*, f. ex out + tonāre to thunder: cf. cl. L. attonāre to strike with a thunderbolt, stun, stupefy. See A- pref. 9. The nature of its relation to STUN is as yet doubtful; connexion with mod.G. staunen, erstaunen, uncertain.

The form-history is rendered more difficult by the ME. habit of spelling on for un (cf. son, sun; ton, tun; done, dun; some, sum; won, wont, etc.), which probably obtained here, since Gower rhymed astone, sone (= OE. sunu, son), Chaucer astoned, woned (= OE. wunod, wont), and 18th c. writers had still astun. OF. o, u, sometimes gives Eng. u as in tun, gum, sum; sometimes ou, ow (through ū) as in crown, sound, round, confound; hence the forms astun, astoun; the late aston seems, like astony, astonish, to have been influenced by later F. estonner; astoon may have been a phonetic spelling of astūn; astoyne is unexplained. STUN (q.v.) is of later appearance, and so far as evidence goes, seems to be an aphetic form of astun. These words do not appear to have any connexion with OE. stunian to resound (the sense 'impingere' was only a bad guess of Junius, repeated by Lye, etc.); but, both in meaning and form, it is difficult to consider them not related to G. staunen, erstaunen, a modern word adopted in 18th century from Swiss stūne, for which German scholars would seek a Teutonic etymology: see Grimm, Kluge. From astone and its pa. pples. astoned, astun'd, astound, have arisen the variants astony, astonied, whence again astonish, astonished, with their derivatives; also a new vb. astound, and pple. astounded, with their derivatives. To astun, astony, astonish, astound, are thus all of common origin.]

An instrument formerly used to take altitudes, and to solve other problems of practical astronomy.

The actual form and structure of the astrolabe of course varied greatly with the progress of astronomy, and the purposes for which the instrument was intended; its most complex form, as described by Tycho Brahe, passed into the modern EQUATORIAL. The chief types were:

a. A portable ARMILLA, or arrangement of armillary circles.

b. A planisphere, representing the circles of the heavens in the plane of the equinoctial, with movable sights.

c. A graduated brass ring with movable label or index turning upon the centre, used simply to take altitudes (the Sea Astrolabe).

astrology (ə'strɒlədʒɪ). Forms: 4–7 astrologie, 4– astrology. [a. F. astrologie (14th c. in Littré), ad. L. astrologia, a. Gr. ἀστρολογία 'account of the stars,' f. ἀστρολόγ-ος 'telling of the stars,' subst. 'one who tells of the stars, an astronomer,' f. ἄστρον star + -λογος speaking, telling, f. λέγ-ειν to tell, speak. Ἀστρολόγος and ἀστρολογία were the earlier terms in Gr.; subsequently ἀστρονόμος and ἀστρονομία were introduced: see ASTRONOMY. Astrologia was likewise the earlier and pop. word in L., where also astronomia took its place as the scientific term, while astrologia passed into the sense of 'star-divination.' In OF. and ME. astronomie seems to be the earlier and general word, astrologie having been subseq. introduced for the 'art' or practical application of astronomy to mundane affairs, and thus gradually limited by 17th c. to the reputed influences of the stars, unknown to science. Not in Shakspere.]

1. gen. Practical astronomy; the practical application of astronomy as an art to human uses; esp. (in later usage) to the prediction of events natural or moral.

The original distinction between Astronomy the science, and Astrology the art, is clearly expressed by Gower Conf. III. 105–135. Chaucer's Treatise on the Astrolabe was a work of 'astrology,' i.e. practical astronomy.

'Astrology' was of two kinds:

†a. Natural Astrology: the calculation and foretelling of natural phenomena, as the measurement of time, fixing of Easter, prediction of tides and eclipses; also of meteorological phenomena. Obs.

This sense (exc. in Hist.) became obs. in 17th c., all the regular physical phenomena passing into the domain of ASTRONOMY, and those that concerned the presumed influence of the moon and planets on the weather, etc., being called ASTRO-METEOROLOGY.

b. Judicial Astrology: the art of judging of the reputed occult and non-physical influences of the stars and planets upon human affairs; star-divination, astromancy. (The only meaning of 'Astrology' since end of 17th c.)

'Judiciary or Judicial Astrology, which we commonly call simply Astrology, is that which pretends to foretell moral events, i.e. such as have a dependence on the free will and agency of man; as if that were directed by the stars.' CHAMBERS Cycl. 1727.

OF. astronomie (11th c. in Littré), ad. L. astronomia, a. Ἀστρονόμος was a later word than ἀστρολόγος, and probably at first applied to those who mapped out the constellations; hence, both in Gr. and L., astronomia was a later and more scientific term than astrologia, which at length acquired the modern sense of astrology or star-prognostication. But in OF. and early Eng., astronomie seems to have been the term first used, and to have embraced the whole field of the ancient astrologia. Subseq. astrologie was adopted for the art or practice of astronomy, and gradually, though not completely before the 17th c., astronomy and astrology took their current senses.]

Lost in mod.G. and Du., where its place is largely taken by to (G. zu, Du. toe), as is also the case in s.w. Eng. dialects; in Scandinavian, on the other hand, to is lost, and its place largely taken by at, e.g. as sign of the infinitive mood, which is also the case in north. Eng. dialect. In OE. (as in the other Teut. langs.) æt governed the dative, only exceptionally the accusative. It was also compounded with many verbs: see AT- pref.[1], all of which are now obs. In ME. it coalesced with various cases of the 'definite article' in atte, atten, attere, 'at the'; so also attam 'at them.'

At is used to denote relations of so many kinds, and some of these so remote from its primary local sense, that a classification of its uses is very difficult. Only a general outline can be here given; its idiomatic constructions with individual words must be looked for under the words themselves, e.g. AIM, ANGRY, APT. It will be observed that when a verb is construed with at, the same construction usually obtains with the cognate sb. and adj., and when at is used with an adjective, it is generally used also with a derived sb.; thus to envy, envy, envious at, apt, aptness at, etc. The arrangement of the senses here adopted is:—I. Local position. II. Practical contact, engagement, occupation, condition, etc. III. Position in a series or graduated scale, rate, price, etc. IV. Time, order, consequence, cause, object. V. In other adverbial phrases. VI. With the infinitive mood. VII. Followed by other prepositions.

I. Local position; answering the question Where? (passing into Whereby? Whence? Whither?)

At expresses the position reached by completed motion to, or that which is left by motion from: lines drawn to a point, from a point, or through a point, meet or intersect at the point. Hence, with certain verbs, at comes into contact with through, from, or of, to, and toward. See 10–15 infra.

* Simple place or position.

1. a. The most general determination of simple localization in space, expressing, strictly, the simple relation of a thing to a point of space which it touches; hence, usually determining a point or object with which a thing or attribute is practically in contact, and thus the place where it is, when this is either so small as to be treated as a mere point, or when the exact relation between the thing and the place is not more particularly expressed by the prepositions close to, near, by, about, on, in, over, under, etc., all of which may at times be covered by at.

at, obsolete form of ATE, pa. t. of EAT.

at-, pref.[1] [:—OE. æt-.] The preposition AT in composition, with force of 'at, close to, to'; frequent in OE., and retained in some words in ME., as at-stand(en to stand close to, 'adstare,' at-rech(en to reach to, get at, at-fore(n before, at-hind(en behind. In the oldest Eng. the prefix was æt- only when it bore the stress accent (i.e. in sbs. and adjs.); ot-, (oþ-, oð-,) when unaccented (in vbs. and prepositions): thus, 'ætgræpe grasping at, apprehensive, ot'grípan, oþ'grípan, to grip at, oð'beran to bear to, bring, oð'iewan (Goth. a'taugjan to show). Northumbrian had sometimes æd-, od-: cf. ATEW. The forms oþ, oð, seem to have arisen in an early assimilation of ot- to óþ-, óð-, from anð-, the old accented form of AND-, ond-, occurring in the prep. óð, the meaning of which was not far removed from that of æt-, ot-. But in later OE. the strong form æt- (ME. at-, in south. dial. et-) was extended to all compounds, without regard to the position of the stress. Mod.Eng. has lost all these compounds, exc. that a'twíte survives in twit. Atone is a modern formation of a different kind.

at-, pref.[2] [:—OE. æt-.] Representing earlier OE. oþ-, oð-, unaccented form of úð- 'away, from' = Gothic unþa- in unþa-þliuhan to flee away, G. ent- (in part), OHG. int-, in entfliehen, OHG. intfliohan, Du. ont- in ontvlieden to flee away. This oð-, oþ-, from úð-, being phonetically levelled with óð- from anð-, and ot- the unaccented form of æt- being assimilated to the latter (see prec.), these three prefixes ran together in form, and when at a later time the accented form æt- took the place of its own weak form ot-, oþ-, oð-, it also usurped the place of oð- from anð-, and oð- from úð-, unþ-. The last of these was by far the most frequent in use: hence the most common sense of at- prefix in ME. is 'from, away' = Gothic unþa-, Ger. ent-, as in at-bear to bear away, at-flee to flee away, at-go to go away. As úð-, oþ-, had nearly the same sense as æf-, of-, these verbs in at- often take the place of corresponding vbs. in of-, as OE. oð-beran, æt-beran, = of-beran to bear away, ME. at-come = OE. of-cyman to come off, escape, etc. Several new compounds of this type arose in ME., and it was even irregularly extended to Fr. words, as in ATSCAPE, refashioned from ascape, OF. escaper. All these are now obsolete.

at-, pref.[3] Assimilated form of L. ad- to, before t, used in all modern words from Latin. In OF. ad-, at-, was reduced to a-, and so introduced into ME., but afterwards refashioned as at-, after L. spelling, both in Fr. and English, e.g. L. attingĕre, OF. ateindre, later atteindre, ME. ataindre, mod. attainder. The Eng. has also taken at- where Fr. retains the simple a-, as in OF. atorné, mod. atourné, ME. atorney, mod. attorney. The t was also erroneously doubled in various words in at- with prefix a- from other sources, as a(t)tame, a(t)tray, a(t)troke. See AD- pref.[2] ate, obs. f. OAT, HATE; var. ETE, Obs., food.

ate (ɛt, occas. eɪt), pa. t. of EAT v.

-ate, suffix[1], formerly -at, forming sbs. derived from L. sbs. in -ātus (-ato- and -atu-), -ātum, -āta, and their modern Romanic representatives.

1. In popular words which lived on into OFr., L. -ātus, -ātum, became (through -ato, -ado, -ad, -ed, -et) -é, as cūrātus, senātus, avocātus, stātus, peccātum, OF. curé, sené, avoué, esté, péché; learned words, adapted from Latin, took -at, as in estat, prelat, primat, magistrat. After 13th c. many of the popular words were refashioned with -at, as sené, senat, avoué, avocat; and all new words have been thus formed, e.g. assassinat, attentat, épiscopat, palatinat, professorat, syndicat. In Eng. these were originally adopted in their Fr. form, estat, prelat, etc.; after 1400, -e was added to mark the long vowel, estate, prelate, etc., and all later words from Fr. took -ate at once. After these, Eng. words are formed directly on L., as curātus 'curate,' or on L. analogies, as alderman-ate, cf. triumvir-ate. In meaning, words in -ate are chiefly: a. Substantives denoting office or function, or the persons performing it, as marquisate, professorate, episcopate, syndicate, aldermanate. b. Participial nouns, as legate 'one deputed,' prelate 'one preferred,' mandate 'a thing commanded,' precipitate 'what is thrown down.' c. Chemical terms, denoting salts formed by the action of an acid on a base, as nitrate, acetate, sulphate, carbonate, alcoholate, ethylate. In the 18th c. chemists said plumbum acetatum 'acetated lead,' lead acted on by vinegar, whence substantively acetatum the acetated (product), the 'acetate'; cf. precipitate, sublimate, distillate. (In the dog-latin of pharmacy, acetas, -ātis, is ignorantly put for acetātum.)

2. In some words, -ate = F. -ate, ad. L. or It. -āta, as in pirate, frigate.

-ate, suffix[2], formerly -at, forming participial adjectives from L. pa. pples. in -ātus, -āta, -ātum, being only a special instance of the adoption of L. pa. pples. by dropping the inflexional endings, e.g. content-us, convict-us, direct-us, remiss-us, or with phonetic final -e, e.g.

complēt-us, finīt-us, revolūt-us, spars-us. The analogy for this was set by the survival of some L. pa. pples. in OF., as confus:—confūsus, content:—contentus, divers:—diversus. This analogy was widely followed in later Fr., in introducing new words from Latin; and both classes of Fr. words, i.e. the popular survivals and the later accessions, being adopted in Eng., provided Eng. in its turn with analogies for adapting similar words directly from L., by dropping the termination. This began about 1400, and as in -ATE[1] (with which this suffix is phonetically identical), L. -ātus gave -at, subsequently -ate, e.g. desolātus, desolat, desolate, separātus, separat, separate. Many of these participial adjectives soon gave rise to causative verbs, identical with them in form (see next), to which, for some time, they did duty as pa. pples., as 'the land was desolat(e by war;' but, at length, regular pa. pples. were formed with the native suffix -ed, upon the general use of which these earlier participial adjs. generally lost their participial force, and either became obs. or remained as simple adjectives, as in 'the desolate land,' 'a compact mass.' (But cf. situate = situated.) So aspirate, moderate, prostrate, separate; and (where a vb. has not been formed), innate, oblate, ornate, sedate, temperate, etc. As the Fr. repr. of L. -atus is -é, English words in -ate have also been formed directly after Fr. words in -é, e.g. affectionné, affectionate.

2. As with Eng. -ed, L. ppl. adjs. in -ātus were also formed on nouns, etc., when no other part of the vb. was required, as cauda tail, caudātus tailed, and often with negatives, as sensus sense, insensātus unprovided with sense. In modern times these have been liberally adopted in Eng., and on their analogy, or that of corresponding Fr. words in -é, new words are constantly formed where L. actually had not the formation, as apiculate, f. apiculus a little point; lunulate, f. lunula little moon; roseate, f. roseus rosy; angustifoliate, f. angustum narrow + folium leaf.

3. Many words, originally adj., are also used substantively, e.g. delegate, reprobate, precipitate, carbonate, alcoholate, and have gone to reinforce the number of the earlier sbs. in -ATE[1], q.v.

-ate, suffix[3], a verbal formative, used to english L. verbs of the first conjugation, and to form Eng. verbs on other L. words or elements. This use originated in the formation of verbs from the participial adjs. in -ate mentioned under -ATE[2].

1. In OE., verbs had been regularly formed on adjectives, as hwít hwítian, wearm wearmian, bysiȝ bysȝian, drýȝe drýȝan, etc. With the loss of the inflexions, these verbs became, by the 15th c., identical in form with the adjs., e.g. to white, warm, busy, dry, empty, dirty, etc.

2. In Latin, vbs. were also freely formed on adjectives, as siccus siccāre, clārus clārāre, līber līberāre, sacer sacrāre. This prevailed still more extensively in Fr., e.g. sec sècher, clair clairer, content contenter, confus confuser, etc. Thence also Eng. received many verbs, which by the 15th c. were identical in form with their adjectives, e.g. to clear, humble, manifest, confuse, etc.

3. On these analogies Eng. adjectives formed from L. pa. pples. began generally, in the 16th c., to yield verbs of identical form, e.g. adj. direct, vb. to direct; adj. separate, vb. to separate; adj. aggravate, vb. to aggravate: precisely analogous to adj. busy, vb. to busy; adj. content, vb. to content.

4. These verbs, though formed immediately from participial adjectives already in English, answered in form to the pa. pples. of L. verbs of the same meaning. It was thus natural to associate them directly with these L. verbs, and to view them as their regular Eng. representatives.

5. This once done, it became the recognized method of englishing a Latin verb, to take the ppl. stem of the L. as the present stem of the Eng.; so that Eng. verbs were now formed on L. pa. pples. by mere analogy, and without the intervention of a participial adjective. In accordance with this, fascinate, concatenate, asseverate, venerate, and hundreds of others, have been formed directly on the participial stems of L. fascināre, concatēnāre, assevērāre, venerāri, etc., without having been preceded by a cognate adjective. In the case of many words introduced in the 16th c., evidence is wanting to show whether the vb. was preceded by, or contemporaneous with, the ppl. adj. in -ate.

6. These Eng. vbs. in -ate correspond generally to Fr. vbs. in -er (:—L. -āre), as Eng. separate, create, F. séparer, créer: this in its turn gave an analogy for the formation of Eng. verbs from French; as F. isoler (ad. It. isolare:—L. insulāre), Eng. isolate; F. féliciter, Eng. felicitate.

7. Latin vbs. in -āre might, analogically, have been formed on many words, on which they were not actually formed; wherever such a vb. might have existed, a F. vb. in -er, and an Eng. vb. in -ate, are liable to be formed. Thus nōbilitas gave in L. nōbilitāre, the Eng. representative of which is nobilitate; fēlīcitas, which might have given fēlīcitāre, has given F. féliciter and Eng. felicitate; and capācitas, which might have given L. capācitāre and F. capaciter, has actually given Eng. capacitate. Hence numerous modern verbs, as differentiate, substantiate, vaccinate; including many formed on modern or foreign words, as adipocerate, assassinate, camphorate, methylate.

-atic, suffix, forming adjs., (= Fr. -atique) ad. L. -āticus, a particular case of the suffix -ic-us, 'of, of the kind of' (see -IC), appended to pa. ppl. stems of verbs; as in errā-re to wander, errāt-um, errātic-us of wandering nature, volātic-us of flying kind, vēnātic-us of hunting kind; also used with sbs., e.g. aqua water, aquāt-us watered, watery, aquātic-us of watery kind, Asiātic-us, fānātic-us (fānum temple), silvātic-us (silva wood), umbrātic-us (umbra shade). Thence also neuter sbs. as viāticum 'what belongs to the way (via).' In late L. and Romanic, the subst. use received great extension: it survives phonetically in the Fr. and Eng. -AGE, in umbrage, vantage, breakage. The adjectives in -atic, as aquatic, Asiatic, fanatic, lunatic, lymphatic, are all of modern introduction; they are to be distinguished from words in which the suffix is -ic only, as dramat-ic, hepat-ic, muriat-ic, pirat-ic, pneumat-ic, prelat-ic.

1855 BROWNING Men & Wom. I. 27 Till the stalks of it seem a-tingle.

-ation (-'eɪʃən), the particular form of the compound suffix -T-ION (-s-ion, -x-ion), which forms nouns of action from L. pples. in -āt-us of vbs. in -āre, Fr. vbs. in -er, and their English representatives. As mentioned under -TION (q.v.), the living form of L. -ātiōn-em in OF. was -aisun, -eisun, whence ME. -aisun, -eisun, -esun, mod. -eason, -ison; cf. ratiōn-em, reisun, REASON; ōrātiōn-em, ureisun, ORISON. All F. words in -ation (OF. -aciun, ME. -aciun, -acioun, -acyon) were of later and literary introduction from Latin, though many of them already existed before the earliest introduction of F. words into English, where, in theological writings, passiun occurs c 1175, and sauvaciun c 1225. In French, vbs. in -er:—L. -āre, far outnumber all others; they also constitute the type on which all recent verbs are formed; hence, nouns in -ation exceed in number not only the early words in -sun, -ҫun, -ssún, but all the other forms of -tion. In English, they number more than 1500 in modern use; the obsolete examples amount to several hundred more: see, within a few pages, apostrophation, apparation, appendication, apprecation, appunctuation, aquation, argutation, ariolation, artation, asperation, aspernation, assectation, assecuration, assedation, assemblation. A few have no accompanying verb in English use, e.g. constellation, duration, lunation, negation, oration, ovation; the great majority have a verb in -ate, e.g. cre-ate, -ation, moder-ate, -ation, satur-ate, -ation; some are formed on Gr. vbs. in -IZE (of which the L. was, or would be, -īzāre, Fr. -iser), or their imitations, e.g. organize, -ation, civilize, -ation: the remainder have a vb. without suffix, derived through Fr., either with or without modification; e.g. modi-fy, -fication, appl-y, -ication, publ-ish, -ication, prove, probation; alter-ation, caus-ation, cit-ation, commend-ation, consult-ation, embark-ation, fix-ation, form-ation, not-ation, plant-ation, quot-ation, tax-ation, tempt-ation, vex-ation, visit-ation. To the mere English speaker the latter have the effect of being formed immediately on the Eng. verbs alter, cause, embark, fix, plant, tax, vex, visit, etc.; and -ation thus assumes the character of a living Eng. suffix. Hence, it comes to be applied to verbs not of Fr. origin, as in starv-ation, flirt-ation, bother-ation, backward-ation. For the meaning, see -TION; words in which -ation is, or seems to be, merely added to the verb, are synonymous with the verbal substantive in -ing; already in 17th c. the use of vexation, visitation, etc. instead of vexing, visiting, etc. (flirtation, starvation had not yet been heard of) was ridiculed thus:

1638 RANDOLPH Amyntas I. iii. 32 Thestylis. But what languages doe they speake, servant? Mopsus. Several languages, as Cawation, Chirpation, Hootation, Whistleation, Crowation, Cackleation, Shriekation, Hissation. The. And Fooleation!

-ative, ad. F. -atif, -ative, L. -ātīvus, consisting of adj. suffix -īvus (see -IVE) appended to ppl. stems in -āt- of vbs. in -āre, e.g. dēmonstrāre to point out, dēmonstrāt-īvus 'having the attribute or habit of pointing out, tending to point out.' Only a few were used in Latin, but the analogy is extensively followed in the modern languages. In the majority of instances, as in demonstrate, demonstrative, adjs. in -ative belong to vbs. in -ate; cases like represent, -ative, affirm, -ative, figure, figurative, in which the Eng. vb. represents (through Fr.) the present stem of the Latin, have afforded a formal analogy for talk, talk-ative.

A few adjs. of this class are moreover formed directly from sbs. in -TY, as if from an intervening verb in -tate, which does not exist; e.g. AUTHORITY, (authoritate*), authoritative; so qualitative, quantitative.

atmosphere ('ætməsfɪə(r)), sb. Also 7 -sphære, -sphear. [ad. mod.L. atmosphæra, f. Gr. ἀτμό-ς vapour + σφαῖρα ball, sphere.]

1. a. The spheroidal gaseous envelope surrounding any of the heavenly bodies. b. esp. The mass of aeriform fluid surrounding the earth; the whole body of terrestrial air.

The name was invented for the ring or orb of vapour or 'vaporous air' supposed to be exhaled from the body of a planet, and so to be part of it, which the air itself was not considered to be; it was extended to the portion of surrounding air occupied by this, or supposed to be in any way 'within the sphere of the activity' of the planet (Phillips 1696); and finally, with the progress of science, to the supposed limited aeriform environment of the earth or other planetary or stellar body. (It is curious that the first mention of an atmosphere is in connexion with the Moon, now believed to have none.)

2. transf. A gaseous envelope surrounding any substance.

I. In philosophical and scientific use.

In senses 2 and 3 now generally held to consist of a positively charged nucleus, in which is concentrated most of the mass of the atom, and round which orbit negatively charged electrons.

1. A hypothetical body, so infinitely small as to be incapable of further division; and thus held to be one of the ultimate particles of matter, by the concourse of which, according to Leucippus and Democritus, the universe was formed.

1477 NORTON Ord. Alch. (in Ashm. 1652) v. 79 Resolving in Attomes [the 15th c. form is uncertain: the MSS. (16th and 17th cc.) have attomis, atomes, attoms, anotamies.] 1546 LANGLEY Pol. Verg. De Invent. I. ii. 4 b, Epicurus one of Democritus dysciples putteth two Causes Atomos or motes and Vacuitie or Emptinesse; of these he saith the foure Elementes come. 1603 HOLLAND Plutarch's Mor. 807 Epicurus saith: That the principles of all things be certeine Atomes. 1606 BRYSKETT *Civ. I. 139 That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms. 1837 WHEWELL Hist. Induct. Sc. (1857) I. 48 The technical term, Atom, marks sufficiently the nature of the opinion. According to this theory, the world consists of a collection of simple particles, of one kind of matter, and of indivisible smallness..and by the various configurations and motions of these particles, all kinds of matter and all material phenomena are produced.

2. In Nat. Phil. physical atoms: the supposed ultimate particles in which matter actually exists (without reference to their divisibility or the contrary), aggregates of which held in their places by molecular forces, constitute all material bodies.

(1782) I. 11 By an atom..I mean an ultimate component part of any gross body. 1871 TYNDALL Fragm. Sc. I. ii. 35 Atoms are endowed with powers of mutual attraction.

3. chemical atoms: a. The smallest particles in which the elements combine either with themselves, or with each other, and thus the smallest quantity of matter known to possess the properties of a particular element.

1819 CHILDREN Chem. Anal. 437 The composition of hypo-sulphuric acid must be, 2 atoms of sulphur, 5 of oxygen. 1868 CHAMBERS Encycl. I. 527 What the chemist regards as an atom in his science, may not be an ultimate and indivisible atom in a physical point of view; the chemical atom, though incapable of division as a chemical atom, may still be composed or built up of many physical atoms. 1873 WILLIAMSON Chem. §85 Each atom of oxygen in water is combined with two atoms of hydrogen.

b. The smallest quantity in which a group of elements, called a radical, forms a compound corresponding to one formed by a simple element, or behaves like an element; thus the smallest known quantity of a chemical compound.

1847 Nat. Encycl. III. 395 The Benzoyle atom is formed of twenty-one elementary atoms—C_{14} H_5 O_2. 1873 WILLIAMSON Chem. §8, N H_4 is a radical, analogous to potassium, and N H_4 is capable in many compounds of taking the place of K: N H_4 is called an atom of Ammonium.

II. In popular use.

III. Of time. (Already in Gr. ἄτομος (1 Cor. xv. 22), L. atomus = 'twinkling of an eye,' and regularly fixed in value in med.L.; see Du Cange.)

†7. The smallest mediæval measure of time; = $\frac{15}{94}$ of a second. Obs.

According to the table of Papias in Du Cange—

47 atoms of time	= 1 ounce	= 7½ seconds	(modern)
8 ounces	= 1 ostent	= 1 minute	"
1½ ostents	= 1 moment	= 1¼ minutes	"
2⅔ moments	= 1 part	= 4 minutes	"
1½ parts (or 4 moments)	= 1 minute	= 6 minutes	"
2 minutes	= 1 point	= 12 minutes	"

Thus an hour was equal to either 5 points, 10 minutes, 15 parts, 40 moments, 60 ostents, 480 ounces, or 22560 atoms.

1. Of or pertaining to atoms. atomic heat: see HEAT sb. 2 e; atomic mass (= atomic weight): the mass of an atom, usually expressed in atomic mass units (in one scale, a unit equal to $\frac{1}{16}$ of the mass of an oxygen atom, or spec. of the oxygen isotope ^{16}O; since 1960, when it was formally adopted by the International Union of Pure and Applied Physics, equal to $\frac{1}{12}$ of the mass of the principal isotope of carbon, ^{12}C), abbrev. a.m.u., amu; atomic number: (of a chemical element) the number of unit positive charges present in the nucleus of its atom, being the physical property which determines the position of the element in the periodic table; symbol Z; atomic structure (see quots.); atomic weight in Chem.: the weight of an atom of an element (or radical), as compared with that of an atom of hydrogen, which is taken as unity; also the sum of the weights of the atom of a compound; combining equivalent; (after the adoption of oxygen as a standard) the ratio between the weight of one atom of the element and $\frac{1}{16}$ of the weight of an atom of oxygen (see WEIGHT sb.[1] 10 d, and atomic mass, above); atomic volume of a body: the space occupied by a quantity of it proportional to its atomic or molecular weight.

attach (ə'tætʃ), v. Also 4 atache, 4–7 attache. Sc. 6 atteche, atteiche. [a. OF. atachie-r (mod. attacher), cogn. with It. attaccare, Sp. atacar; f. à to, at + a radical which is found also in détacher DETACH, and is connected by Diez and Littré with the Genevese tache, Sp., Pg. tacha, a round-headed nail, a TACK, q.v. Thus lit. 'to tack to.' See Diez, Littré, Skeat.

The development of signification seems to have been thus: 1. The regular OF. sense was 'to fasten,' as in mod.Eng., where however this sense is of quite recent adoption from mod.F. 2. The earlier Eng. sense of 'arrest, seize,' arose in AF. and Eng., as an elliptical expression for 'attach by some tie to the control or jurisdiction of a court,' i.e. so that it shall have a hold on the party. A man might thus be attaché or 'nailed,' par le cors by his body, par ses avers et par ses chateus by his goods and chattels, par pleges by sureties for his appearance (Britton). In the first two cases the attachment consisted in arrest and detention. 3. The It. equivalent is attaccare: in the 16th c. the It. attaccare battaglia to join battle, attaccarsi a to fasten (oneself) upon, 'attack,' was first imitated with F. attacher, and then adapted in Fr. as attaquer; whence Eng. ATTACK, and occasional 17th c. use of attach (see 4 infra).]

(This sense slowly disengaged itself from the preceding, as a body of professional legal agents was recognized and incorporated. The actual duties and privileges of the Attorney-at-Law also varied with time and place; in earlier times, as still in some of the United States of America, the distinction between attorney and counsel did not exist. (Cf. next sense.) From an early period the name was often used reproachfully as almost = 'knave or swindler': see quotations under b. By the Judicature Act of 1873, the title, never used in Scotland, was abolished in England, 'attorneys' being merged in the 'Solicitors of the Supreme Court.')

2. spec. Attorney-General, Attorney General: a legal officer of the state empowered to act in all cases in which the state is a party. In England, Ireland, Isle of Man, most of the British Colonies and settlements, and in the United States, the title of the first ministerial law-officer of the government, also of his or her Majesty's attorney in the duchies of Lancaster and Cornwall, and county palatine of Durham. Plural (better): Attorney-Generals.

The designation began in England, where this officer was at first merely the king's attorney (see above 6), called from the reign of Edward IV, 'the king's general attorney,' to distinguish him from those appointed to act on special occasions, or in particular courts. The deseriptive designation seems to have grown into a title during the 16th c. The A.G. is now a member of the Ministry (but not of the Cabinet), and usually has a seat in the House of Commons.

4. A quality or character considered to belong to or be inherent in a person or thing; a characteristic quality.

1836-7 SIR W. HAMILTON Metaph. viii. (1870) I. 151 Attribute is a word properly convertible with quality, for every quality is an attribute and every attribute is a quality; but in our language, custom has introduced a certain distinction in their application. Attribute is considered as a word of loftier signification, and is, therefore, conventionally limited to qualities of a higher application. Thus, for example, it would be felt as indecorous to speak of the qualities of God, and as ridiculous to talk of the attributes of matter.

(This distinction is hardly borne out by historical usage. Originally, 'the attributes of God' was preferred probably because men assumed no knowledge of the actual qualities of the Deity, but only of those more or less fitly 'attributed' him; i.e. 'attributes' in sense 1. But the exalted sense 2 may have associated itself with the expression in the minds of many who used it. J. A. H. M.)

The 'explanation' of the origin of the word in quot. 1935 is one of several unsubstantiated stories. Robert, Dict. de la Langue Franç., regards Fr. auguste as a noun that has arisen by antonymy from the adj. auguste 'august, majestic', but evidence is lacking.

The audience began shouting out, 'August! August!' (The German phrase, 'dumme August' is equivalent to our word 'zaney' or 'addle-pate'.) And the name has stuck to this day. 1950 *Oxf. Jun. The L. ūrus and Gr. οὖρος were adopted from the OTeut. word, of which the derivation is uncertain.]

Historically and properly, the name of an extinct species of Wild Ox (Bos Urus Owen, B. primigenius Boj.), described by Cæsar as Urus, which formerly inhabited Europe, including the British Isles, and survived until comparatively recent times in Prussia, Poland, and Lithuania. Since this became extinct, the name has often been erroneously applied to another species, the European Bison (Bos Bison Gesn., B. bonasus Linn.), still extant in the forests of Lithuania, in which sense it is used by some English naturalists.

In early mod.G. aurox, aurochs, was still applied to the Urus, and only since its disappearance (in 17th c.) has been popularly misapplied to the Bison, in which sense it was unfortunately adopted by some naturalists, before the facts were known. More recent authors have sought to remedy the mistake by introducing the form Urox (MHG. ûr-ochse) for the Urus, while retaining Aurochs for the Bison; but as Urox and Aurochs are only the earlier and later form of the same name, this is historically indefensible, and the only accurate nomenclature is to distinguish the two animals as Urus (or Urox), and Bison (improperly called Aurochs). 5. a. A luminous atmospheric phenomenon, now considered to be of electrical character, occurring in the vicinity of, or radiating from, the earth's northern or southern magnetic pole, and visible from time to time by night over more or less of the adjoining hemisphere, or even of the earth's surface generally; popularly called the Northern (or Southern) Lights, merry-dancers, streamers, etc.

The northern lights, being alone conspicuous in Europe, had from the earliest periods various popular names in the northern languages; they began to attract scientific attention early in the 17th c., and were described by Gassendi in 1621 under the descriptive appellation of aurora borealis or 'northern dawn,' their simplest form suggesting the appearance of dawn or approaching sunrise on the northern horizon; this appellation (occasionally varied as aurora septentrionalis) passed into general scientific use. On the recognition of similar phenomena in the antarctic regions, these were called aurora australis or 'southern lights'; whence aurora is now used generically as the proper term for the phenomenon, without any thought of 'dawn,' and with English plural auroras; and this has become the ordinary prose meaning of aurora, the preceding senses being only poetical.

1621 [1822 BURROWES Cycl. s.v., On Sept. 2nd, 1621, the same phenomenon was seen all over France; and it was particularly described by Gassendus in his Physics, who gave it the name of aurora borealis.] 1717 *Phil. auto'nomasy. Derived in mod. If it does none of these things, then it is no auxiliary.

[In common use in the Levant, but of uncertain language and origin; in It. and Pg. avanía, F. avanie, mod.Gr. ἀβανία, Arab. and Turk. awānī, also found as awārī (Devic), and in Bocthor ʿawān, and ʿawānia. See below. Also in 17th c. anglicised as AVENY, q.v.]

An imposition by the (Turkish) government, a compulsory tax, government exaction, 'aid,' 'benevolence' (Marsh); spec. (as applied by Christians) an extortionate exaction or tax levied by the Turks. Hence avanious a., extortionate.

[The etymology of avania has been variously sought in Arabic, Persian, Turkish: see Devic, in Littré's Suppt., and G. P. Marsh, Notes and Additions to Wedgwood. The variant Arabic form awārī (whence Eng. avaria, avarria, above) as well as original correspondence of meaning, suggests a connexion with It. avaría—see AVERAGE sb.[2]: in fact Mr. Marsh proposed the derivation of the latter from this word. But on the other hand, the various and uncertain forms of the word in Arabic may be merely adaptations of Fr. avarie or It. avaría, assimilated to native words or roots (e.g. awār oppression, injustice, hawān contempt, etc.) 'The plur. aavaniet is now in popular use in Syria, to express government exactions, the singular signifying aid, help, just as benevolence in Europe sometimes meant a compulsory tax' (Marsh). The word has been adopted in It. and Pg. in the transferred sense: It. avanía 'an undeserved wrong, a secret grudge, an insulting injury' (Florio); Pg. avanía 'wrong, injury' (Vieyra).]

Ave Maria (see below), Ave Mary ('eɪvi:'meərɪ). [L. and It. See AVE.] The Hail Mary! the angelic salutation to the Virgin (Luke i. 28), combined with that of Elizabeth (v. 42), used as a devotional recitation, with the addition (in more recent times) of a prayer to the Virgin, as Mother of God; so named from its first two words.

The words are: 'Ave [Maria] gratia plena, Dominus tecum; benedicta tu in mulieribus; et benedictus fructus ventris tui [Jesus; Amen]. Sancta Maria, Mater Dei, ora pro nobis peccatoribus nunc et in hora mortis nostræ.' (The words Jesus, Amen, were added by Pope Urban IV, 1261-66. They are now omitted, since the addition of the prayer first sanctioned by Pius V, 1568.)

(Of the Latin the usual Eng. pronunciation is ('eɪvi:mə'raɪə), but ('ɑ:veɪmə'ri:ə) after Italian, or 'restored Latin,' is common; some poets have ('mɑ:rɪə) after L. precedents.)

aver, obs. form of A-FIRE and EVER.

aver-, in some compound terms pertaining to feudal usage, appears to be connected with AVERAGE sb.[1] Of these terms, we have only the explanations (usually inferences from the assumed derivation) offered by legal editors of 16th and 17th centuries, which are of very doubtful value:—

†1. aver-corn. ? Corn paid as a feudal due or in lieu of service.

[1263 Charter in Thorn Chron. 1912/2 Quoddam servitium annuum quod avercorn vocatur, sub mensura minus certa.] 1670 BLOUNT Law Dict., Aver-corn, is such Corn, as by Custom is brought by the Tenants Carts or Carriages to the Lords Granary or Barn. ?1695 KENNETT Gloss., Aver-corn a reserved rent in corn paid to religious houses by their tenants or farmers.

†2. averland. ? Land subject to 'average.'

1670 BLOUNT Law Dict., Averland, Item Cellarius libere solebat capere omnia sterquilinia ad suum opus in omni vico, nisi ante ostia eorum qui habebant Averland. Mon. Angl. I. par. fol. 302. a. It seems to have been such Land as the Tenants did plow and manure, cum averiis suis, for the proper Use of a Monastery or Lord of the Soil: [Chron. J. de Brakelonda 75] Quod autem nunc vocatur Averland, fuit terra rusticorum, which was subject to Averages, or the Lord's Carriages.

†3. averpenny. ? Money paid in lieu of 'average.' (Cf. AVERAGE[1] quot. 1206.)

1253-1378 St. M. Magd. Coll. MS. in 4th Rep. R. Com. Hist. MSS. (1874) 459/1 [Richard ii. 1378, 12 May. †4. aver-silver. ? = averpenny. (Halliwell suggests: 'A custom or rent so called, originating from the cattle, or avers of the tenants of the soil.')

'average, sb.[1] Old Law. Forms: 5- average; Sc. 6 avarage, arage, arrage, aryage, 6-9 arriage. [In OF. average (Godef.) and med. (Anglo-) L. averagium, apparently the same as avera in Domesday Book, explained by Spelman as 'one day's work which the king's tenants gave to the sheriff.' In the vernacular form, only in Scotch, where also phonetically worn down to arage (cf. laverok, lark, favorand, farrand), and spelt arriage in association with carriage. Origin uncertain.

Early explanations evidently treated avera as latinized form of OF. ovre, œvre work. Sir J. Skene referred it to aver 'beast of burden,' and so explained the meaning; but his proposed explanation (since repeated in the Law Dicts.) is hardly supported by the early use of averagium and OF. average. Danish hoveri 'average, soccage-duty,' suggested by Wedgwood, is (with its Romance suffix) a more recent word than averagium, and not possibly its source. Mr. C. I. Elton, from the actual use of avera, is disposed to revert to the idea of referring it to OF. ovre, œvre, its form being perhaps affected by the use of avere, aver, for property and cattle. He compares averagium with F. ouvrage, and med.L. operagium.]

Some kind of service due by tenants to the feudal superior. Explained in the Law Dictionaries, since Sir J. Skene, as 'service done by the tenant with his beasts of burden' (see above). Known chiefly in the phrase 'arriage and carriage,' retained in Scotch leases till 20 Geo. II, but having in later times no definitely ascertained meaning.

The earliest instances occur in connexion with the maritime trade of the Mediterranean; but the derivation is uncertain (see below). The Eng. auerays (plural) in Arnold's Chron. (if not a misprint) was probably meant for the F. word; the form average (also in Arnold's Chron.) is confined to English, and evidently formed on the model of lodemanage (pilotage), primage, etc.: see -AGE.]

2. Any charge or expense over and above the freight incurred in the shipment of goods, and payable by their owner. (In this sense it still occurs in petty average, and the now inoperative phrase, average accustomed in Bills of Lading: see quotations 1540 and 1865.)

4. a. The incidence of any such charge, expense, or loss; esp. the equitable distribution of expense or loss, when of general incidence, among all the parties interested, in proportion to their several interests.

particular average is the incidence of the partial loss or damage of ship, cargo, or freight, through unavoidable accident, upon the individual owners (or insurers) of these respective interests.

general average is apportionment of loss caused by intentional damage to ship (e.g. cutting away of masts or boats), or sacrifice of cargo and consequent loss of freight, or of expense incurred by putting into a port in distress, by acceptance of towage or other services, to secure the general safety of ship and cargo; in which case contribution is made by the owners (or insurers) of ship, cargo, and freight in proportion to the value of their respective interests.

(In connexion with Maritime Law and Marine Insurance this has come to be the prevailing sense of the word. Its first known occurrence is in the 14th c. Civil Statute of Cataro (Pardessus V. 97), where it is enacted that anything given as a present or 'Christmas-box' (pro strena), or paid in tribute (pedocia), with the consent of the majority, for the good of the vessel, shall be shared by way of average (illud dividatur per avariam). [Few words have received more etymological investigation: see Diez, Dozy, Littré, Wedgwood, E. Müller, Skeat, etc., and especially the fruitful researches of the late G. P. Marsh in the American edition of Wedgwood (New York 1861). The latter has conclusively shown that, as a maritime term, avaria, averia, was first used in the Mediterranean, and that its original meaning was duty charged upon goods. In connexion with this cf. also quotations from Muratori Chron. Parmense (in Du Cange s.v. Averia), e.g. Conscenderint lembum Averiæ ad excipiendos prædictos galeones, 'they went on board the revenue cutter to intercept the aforesaid galleons.' These results quite dispose of the two derivations suggested in Diez from Ger. hafen haven, and Arab. ʿawâr loss, damage, the latter being merely a mod. Arabic translation and adaptation of the western term in its latest sense. Mr. Marsh's connexion of the word with the Arabic or Turkish avania, avaria, is of great weight; but as said under AVANIA, that word is more probably adopted from the Franks. May not averia be a derivative of It. avere, OF. aveir, property, goods (see AVER sb.), in sense of 'charge on property or goods'? Compare such terms as tonnage, poundage, pollage (charge on polls). The chief difficulty lies in the early It. form avaria, not averia, and F. avarie: the Catalan has however been averia since 13th c.: see Marsh on Sp. and Catalan use of the word, and Averia, Avaria in Du Cange. It is to be noted that OF. avarie was used of other than maritime dues or charges; in a document dated Nicosia, 18 March 1468, in De Mas Latrie, Histoire de Chypre III. 276, the owner of a mill is bound 'de paier l'ensencive (= cens) de l'abaie de Bibi, et tout autre avarie que le dit moulin paie aujourdhui.' Cf. also certain uses of avérage in Godefroy.]

b. Const. from, to.

The use of the prep. to, rather than from, after averse and its derivatives, although condemned by Johnson as etymologically improper, is justified by the consideration that these words express a mental relation analogous to that indicated by hostile, contrary, repugnant, hostility, opposition, dislike, and naturally take the same construction. Aversion in the sense of an action, which would properly be followed by from, is now obsolete. Examination of many instances shows that from has been used by Donne, Speed, R. Burton, Milton, Bp. Mountagu, Sir T. Browne, Evelyn, Hale, Dryden, Pope, Johnson, Southey, Motley, Lowell, and J. R. Green; to by Heylin, Walton, Boyle, Locke, South, Addison, Steele, De Foe, D. North, Richardson, H. Walpole, Gibbon, Burke, Buckle, Mill; whilst Sir E. Sandys, Jer. Taylor, Barrow, Clarendon, Swift, Hume, Macaulay have used both. Shakspere does not use the word.

b. to be awake to (anything): to be fully conscious of it, to appreciate it fully. Cf. alive.

awake (ə'weɪk), v. Pa. t. awoke (ə'wəʊk), formerly also awaked. Pa. pple. awoke and awaked. Forms: α. (1 awæcn-an, see below and cf. AWAKEN). Pa. t. 1–3 awóc, 3–4 awok, 4 awook, (6 Sc. awoik), 3- awoke. Pa. pple. 1 awacen, 3 awake, 7 awaken, (poet.) awoken, 8- awoke. β. 1 awaci-an, 3 awaki-en, awakie, 4 awaki, -ye, 4- awake, (5 Sc. awalk). Pa. t. 1 awacode, 3–9 awaked. Pa. pple. 1 awacod, 4- awaked. [In this, as in the simple WAKE, q.v., two early verbs are mixed up; the form-history being complicated with that of AWAKEN, as the sense-history is with that of AWECCHE. 1. For the intransitive vb., OE. has awæcnan, awóc, awacen, compound of wæcnan, wóc, wacen, the present stem having a formative -n-, wak-n-. (Cf. Goth. fraihn-an, frah, fraihans.) This present began already in OE. to be treated as a weak vb., with pa. t. awæcnede; whence mod.E. awaken, awakened. As the earliest texts have onwæcnan, the a- in later OE. was probably = on-, not A- pref. 1. 2. Late OE. had also a weak vb. awacian, awacode, in form a compound of wacian, wacode, to watch, keep awake, but in sense identical with awæcnan, and perhaps originating in a confusion of the two. This gave M. and mod.E. awake, awaked. 3. After the weak awakened came into common use, as pa. t. of AWAKEN, the original relation of awoke and its pa. pple. to that vb. became obscured; and later instinct, in accordance with the general analogies of the language, has referred them to AWAKE, treating them as strong equivalents of awaked. They are so included here. 4. Of all these forms the sense was in OE. only intrans. 'to arise or come out of sleep,' the transitive (causal) sense of 'rouse from sleep' being expressed by the derivative awęcc(e)an, ME. AWECCHE, Goth. uswakjan, mod.G. erwecken; but soon after 1100 awake began to be used in this sense also, and at length superseded awecche, which is not found after 1300. There has been some tendency, especially in later times, to restrict the strong pa. t. and pa. pple. to the orig. intrans. sense, and the weak inflexion to the trans. sense, but this has never been fully carried out. 5. The str. pa. pple. awaken was already in 13th c. reduced to awake, and at length became merely an adjective (mostly predicative), after which a new form from the pa. tense, awoken, later awoke was substituted; but the weak awaked is also in common use. (Shakspere used only the weak inflexions.)]

I. intr.

1. To come out of the state of sleep; to cease to sleep. (With pa. pple. belonging to the active voice, cf. come, gone, risen.) Cf. AWAKEN 1.

For the form-history, and its complication with that of AWAKE, see the latter. In OE. awæcnan was a str. vb. with pa. t. and pple. awóc, awacen. But sometimes the present stem (being irregular) was mistaken for a weak verb, whence already in 9th c. the pa. awæcnede, mod. awakened, which is now treated as the proper pa. t., while awoke and its accompanying pa. pple. are referred to the originally weak awake. Like awake, this was also at first strictly intrans.; the transitive use is of comparatively recent appearance, but now (in sense 5) the most frequent.]

[The actual awe, in 13th c. aȝe, was a. ON. agi, acc. aga (Da. ave), representing an OTeut. agon-* wk. masc. (Both f. ag-an to fear.) The ME. eye, (aye,) and awe, were thus in origin and derivation distinct though cognate words, but were practically treated as dialectal variants of the same word, of which aye was still used in s.w. *c*1400, while awe was in the n.e. *c*1250. The sense-development is common to both. They are therefore here taken together; the examples being separated into groups α. (from OE. ęȝe) and β. (from ON. agi).]
